

ABSTRACT

A home network has a data processing device and a network access device for access to an external network. When a new device is added the network is to be configured. Configuration is done as follows. The communication between the data processing device and the access device is monitored. Then, information is extracted from the communication about protocols and external network addresses. The home network can then be configured automatically based on the information extracted.